Foreword

Despite the depression the annual Tiger has again appeared. There are fewer pages, fewer pictures, fewer frills. The Spartan simplicity of the book is, we hope, in keeping with the times.

When you pick up this Tiger in later life, let it symbolize the forebearance and the courage with which your school, your community, your parents, faced these critical years.

If your school days mean anything to you, carry their happy memory on through all the years. Then, as a mature citizen keep your interest in the public schools. Let nothing hamper their efficient operation and sane growth. Assist them always, in good times and bad, to achieve their objective, the making of good citizens.
Dedication

By dedicating this Tiger to Mr. Johnson, the Seniors wish to show their appreciation for his many years of service, kindly friendship, wonderful sympathy with children and appreciation of their difficulties.

We shall miss him from our corridors. One and all, we speak for the entire student body, we wish him the very best that life can bring.

Randall Johnson, Fifty Years a Teacher

At the age of sixty-nine, Mr. Randall Johnson announces his retirement from the teaching profession to which he has given 50 years of conscientious service. Unique is his record of never having missed a day of teaching because of illness during all those years.

He received his early education in the Ryan High School, Appleton, Wis.; Oshkosh Normal; Whitewater Normal, and Platteville Normal. His first position was in the rural and village schools of Outagamie County. Following that, he taught in the State Industrial School at Waukesha; Industrial School for Indians, Waukesha; Platteville State College; Price County Normal; Marathon County Normal. He came to Ripon in 1925 as principal of the junior high school.

The Football Season

A tie with Horicon for the Little Ten championship was the ultimate triumph for the football team after a season of some splendid games. Mayville, the conference "big-shot" for many seasons was relegated to a second place when they bowed to Horicon and Horicon in turn lost a hard-fought 7-0 game to Ripon.

The Basketball Season

Beaver Dam, Columbus, Mayville and Horicon were the only outfits that Hettenger's gang couldn't crack on the basketball floor this season. Even those teams knew they were in real games for the winning scores were out in front by rarest margins, except in the Columbus game.

Graduating this spring are Bob Buchholz, Captain Carl Lyle, Kurt Radtke and John Adamski.

Band Activities

Climaxed by attendance at two tournaments, the year has been a busy one as usual for the band. School and community programs, and athletic events called on the musicians for assistance and they responded generously and capably.

Unusual records were established at the tournaments. At Waupun the band, playing in class B, secured first place awards in concert competition and on parade. Every soloist except one took first place awards. They were:

Neil Resheske, trombone, class A, first; Carroll Schattschneider and Sidney Morgan, trombone, class B, first; Ethlyn Prellwitz, xylophone, class A, first; Donald Schroeder, french horn, class B, first; William Hoffman, Kurt Radtke, Howard Krueger, Neil Resheske, brass quartette, class A, first; Lawrence Wittstock, saxophone, class A, first; Morris Blodgett and Lawrence Wittstock, saxophone duet, class A, first; Howard Krueger, trombone, class A, second.

At Madison for the big state tournament, the Elephants continued to demonstrate their ability. Playing in class B and competing with bands possessing complete instrumentation, Ripon’s small 42-piece inadequately equipped band, won considerable commendation for its fine work. In concert and parade the judges gave Ripon second place awards. In solo competition, individuals again came through well:

Neil Resheske, trombone, class A, first; Carroll Schattschneider, trombone, class B, first; Donald Schroeder, french horn, class B, first; Ethlyn Prellwitz, xylophone, class A, first; William Hoffman, Kurt Radtke, Neil Resheske, Howard Krueger, brass quartet, class A, first; Lawrence Wittstock, saxophone, class A, second.

Neil Resheske and Donald Schroeder were recommended to compete in the national band tournament at Evanston in June.
The Song of His Heart

By Ruth Wepner

The theater in the small town of Osburn was swarming with village folk. Rich and poor, young and old; all were eager to be auditors of their good friend, "Harty," as he was universally called by his friends.

As the old friends reunited in the rickety old showhouse, you might have been able to grasp a word or two—"You bet, Pete! the corn crop's goin' ter be mighty good this year!"

Or you might have heard the plaintive murmur of a sympathetic old lady—"Yes, dearie, it certainly is too bad that she had to die smack off. An' wi' them li'l children hardly more'n off her knees!"

All of a sudden the crowd burst into wild applause. For there was Hartwell slowly, but alertly walking to the center of the stage.

As his kindly eyes traveled from one side of the hall to the other, the assemblage hushed immediately.

Hartwell, realizing and appreciating the kindly spirit of his friends, smiled, and began to speak slowly, distinctly.

"My friends, you cannot possibly understand my appreciation of your wonderful tribute to me. I am sure I do not deserve it in the least. "But," questioningly, "shall we start?"

After a number of new and old songs, he requested, "Now, my friends, is there a song any one of you would particularly like to hear?"

As silence again passed over the multitude, a frail little middle-aged woman with a sad, distant look in her eyes rose from her seat and uttered the words, "Please, my friend, Mr. Hartwell, an old-fashioned song, one dear to the hearts of many here present."

Mr. Hartwell, not remembering the recent death of the woman's son, began to sing the pathetic old song, "Mother Love Is Dearest."

As the song progressed, the audience was unaware of the drawn lines which were deepening upon the woman's thin face; neither the whitening of her knuckles as she grasped the arms of her seat, nor the tenseness of her entire being was noticed.

Unable to conquer her grief, Mrs. Morgan fell limply to the floor.

The formerly awed and attentive listeners were now in a tumult of excitement. Due to the footlights, Hartwell was unable to see what had happened, but knew something was wrong.

As he hurried off-stage, Hartwell heard the burly voice of a farmer cry, "Is Doctor Black in the crowd?"
"Here," came the instantaneous reply, "what's amiss?"

"Mrs. Morgan has fainted!"

By that time the doctor had reached the place where Mrs. Morgan had collapsed. "Hmmm," he said, as he picked up her slight frame, "her head is fractured pretty badly. Here, you people, stop that crowding! One of you women go home and prepare a bed for Mrs. Morgan."

The doctor's commands brought immediate response. Within two minutes, every woman was out of the hall, going toward the home of the cobbler and his wife.

In fifteen minutes' time Mrs. Morgan was laid in the immaculate four-poster bed in the cobbler's humble home.

In fifteen minutes more, Mrs. Morgan quietly passed away in the little room surrounded by her many sorrowful, sympathizing friends.

As the heart-broken neighbors slowly filed out of the cobbler's rambling house, Hartwell halted them. He had, in the preceding few minutes, added ten years to his life.

Then, in a low voice he spoke, "My dear friends, as most of you realize, it was my thoughtlessness that has caused this catastrophe. It was extremely inconsiderate of me to sing that song, especially after Mrs. Morgan's recent bereavement. Therefore, I declare I shall never again sing for my friends in public."

The villagers were awed by Hartwell's voice. This time, however, with horror. Too moved to speak, they slowly walked away, each to his own home.

His friends, who had joined him on his homeward way, endeavored to cheer the disconsolate man; but he was inconsolable. He was so grief-stricken he was unable to bid his friends "good night."

* * * *

Years passed.

Hartwell was a lonely insignificant coppersmith in his native village. He lived mechanically—worked, ate, slept, even conversed automatically.

A musical program was to be given at the old tumble-down theater that evening. David Deverly, Hartwell's closest friend, had asked the latter to attend the program with him, hardly daring to hope that Hartwell would.

To Deverly's utter amazement Hartwell accepted, asking the former to call for him at 7 o'clock.

For some unexplainable reason Deverly was extremely excited. He told himself over and over again that nothing unusual was afoot; still, he was sure there was. However, he controlled his excitement adequately enough to prevent revealing the situation to Hartwell.

The minutes before the beginning of the program were almost identical with those preceding a similar occasion twenty years ago with the exception, of course, of the conversation among the audience.

If one listened he might hear a young man exclaim, "Yes, sir, I believe that book is the most interesting one I have ever read." Or you might, eaves-dropping upon a couple of young ladies hear, confidingly, "Aren't they beautiful? The clerk at the—" Here the brass band broke into the numerous friendly confidences.

As the singer appeared, the audience applauded so wildly that the music of the band was almost drowned out.

The young singer raised his hand in mid-air. Immediately the hall became quiet. He began with a number of popular songs. Then he announced, "For the sake of the 'old-timers,' I shall sing a song which might possibly be of more interest to them than the type I have just sung." And he broke into the song Hartwell had often sung in his youth.

As Deverly charmed the audience with his melodious voice, Hartwell, like a man in a dream, rose and joined the young man in the song.

Deverly, like the audience, was so perplexed, that he stopped singing as Hartwell's rich baritone rang out clear and sweetly to the ears of his awed friends.

The audience, however, remained seated many minutes after Hartwell had ended the song.

Finally a young mother carrying a softly-crying child, brought them back to realization. They rose as one body and slowly walked out of the quiet theater—too moved to speak.

May 12, Friday—Juniors give pre-prom in the H. S. gym. The decorations were lovely and the music, furnished by Johnny Moore’s orchestra was simply divine, my dear, etc., etc.

June 8, Thursday—Commencement; with tears in our eyes and a few snifflers the seniors depart.
